WAR NOT TO END A "DRAW GAME"

London, Aug. 1.—The great war will not be a "drawn game." The allies will surely win the reward of their sacrifices—and those sacrifices will have been in vain unless there shall result new world conditions of comity and better understanding.

So declared Lord Newton, under-secretary for foreign affairs, in a statement prepared today for the United Press. It was in response to a query addressed to the foreign office for comment on the second anniversary of the conflict.

"Entering the third year of the war," Lord Newton asserted, "one is struck by the fact that contemporary events in France indicate the allies' effort, which until now has been largely that of preparation, will not result in the depressing state of equilibrium which some have prophesied for it, using the metaphor 'a drawn game.' The sacrifice of our own men and those of the great French republic and our other allies on scattered gigantic fronts will quite assuredly win their reward."

"What is to be the reward of all this sacrifice and effort?"

"It is not only punishment of the blood guilty, or new hope for the nations that have been victims of the central powers; new hope for Belgium, Serbia and the Armenians and Syrians; that those who planned such deeds of violence will assuredly meet just recompense; but beyond what is to be meted out there stands the possibility of the future and our sacrifice and effort will have been in vain unless there shall arise from all this bloodshed new world conditions in which action between state and state is conducted in an atmosphere of better understanding, or when mutual understanding falls the points at issue be decided more under the influence of the principles of justice."
